

ROAD SHOW

No matter how we travel — by foot, bicycle, car, or train — there are signs that tell us when to stop, yield, or merge. Signs to let us know that there's a sharp curve ahead or that pedestrians might be crossing the road. Some observers, like Providence sculptor Boris Bally, think these icons of the highways are also art. Bally recycles all kinds of street and road signs to create his Transit Chairs and DPW Bowls, which are sure to stop traffic. — Cheryl and Jeffrey Katz

Transit Chairs, 48 inches high, are $1,600 each; DPW Bowls, 24 inches in diameter, are $360. Chairs and bowls are available at The Society of Arts and Crafts, Boston, and the Aric Gallery, Cambridge. Boris Bally's work can be viewed online at www.borishally.com or at www.guild.com.
